(Ghanaian Chronicle, Ghana) May 28, 2009.

Leaders of Yahuda Security, an alleged British security company based in London, recently met with President Mills to apparently sell their company and what they could do to help fight against the drug menace in Ghana. Some few days after this meeting with the President, the UK branch of the Convention People's Party (CPP), after conducting a search on Yahuda came out with a report that the company was not a credible one, since it was formed two days to their meeting with President Mills. Government officials reacting to the story said President Mills did not strike any deal with the company and that it was just a courtesy call on him by leaders of Yahuda.
